Adolphe Appia: 'Luminous

Up close they are revelatory; shimmering with those qualities that would have come to life through dramatic performance — through music, lighting, costumes and bodies, of both actors and audience.

Adolphe Appia

Appia, to gain his effect, studied every scene of the opera and worked out how the relationship of actor, scene, dialogue, music, and lighting combined to create a unified harmony.

ADOLPHE

But, like they say, opposites attract and Appia found an excellent demographic for his work in a world when designers and choreographers did not know what they were doing wrong. They are to him a group of quite separate individuals, and instinctively he treats them as such. He was capable of influencing large establishments by publishing his essays and books and distributing them to the leading figures of theatrical companies; they were astonished by his philosophical and vivid descriptions of specific concepts.

ADOLPHE

Not only does he not control the final form of his art, but this form seems relatively independent of his dramatic intentions.

ADOLPHE

Richard Beacham brings together for the first time, selections from all his major works.

Adolphe Appia

First, the dramatist must transpose his idea into a dramatic form; then the resultant text must be transposed to meet the demands of a production for an audience. Figure 3: Photograph of Adolphe Appia, circa 1900 Email me here:

Adolphe Appia

Adolphe Appia was born in 1862 in Geneva, Switzerland. After two years he moved on to the famed Hochschule für Musik und Theater in Leipzig, then to the Conservatoire de Paris, and finally back to Germany, where he finished off his studies in Dresden in 1888.

Adolphe Appia > Drawings and Productions

Although his education was roaming, his passionate devotion to the work of the imperious German composer Richard Wagner was steadfast. Cómo citar este artículo: Ruiz, M. Only those properly three-dimensional foreground parts of a setting that were intended to be built on the stage — platforms, rostra, stairs and podia — were drawn in the positive.
