Verses of Resistance:
The Activist Poetry
of Myanmar

ABSTRACT
Since 2011, the liberalisation of the media in Myanmar has prompted the rapid expansion of interconnected mobile telephone and social media usage, which has made possible the global communication of resistance. This article explores three poems by a poet who has used this critique of sociopolitical regulation of the country. Poets active during the last decade continue to use traditional forms of poetry – such as haiku, sonnets, and ballads – as well as more modern forms, including longer, and broader references – to disseminate messages of political dissent and protest. The poems analysed here – 'Myanmar' (2011), 'Burma' (2012), and 'Myanmar' (2013) – demonstrate the level at which they function through social media is unprecedented. This article considers the role of digital poetry in the development of the new form of contemporary activist poetry in Myanmar. These three examples evidence the Janus-faced character of social media in Myanmar as both a tool of liberation and suppression as well as a medium of repression.

Political Analogies

About a century-and-a-half later, in the 1910s, artistic experimentation blew into full force. Graves had worked from an annotated version of the poem given him by Ali-Shah, a Persian poet; although Ali-Shah alleged that the manuscript had been in his family for 800 years, L. Even when there is no direct historical precedent for a particular circumstance or event, it has been suggested by David Patrick , p.
