One of these conveniences is that the real Richard must be color-blind, which is used to determine the real identities of both nine-year-old boys. But alas, it petered out, despite a completely random trip on Mrs Bradley's part to the Lascaux cave paintings in France which was at least reminiscent of the random occurrences in some of her best early mysteries. ### Mrs Bradley

Gladys Mitchell

You read this When a starving artist answers the phone in a call box, he becomes involved in a mysterious business of package delivery. One of the least action-oriented of Gladys' novels, and not even effective for armchair sightseeing. A holdover from the days before Alfred the Great ruled over the island.
