Nominated for an Academy Award, Hellfire: a journey from Hiroshima captures the artists Iri and Toshi Maruki in their decades long collaboration to create a monumental testament to the effects of the atomic bomb - the Hiroshima murals, which have been viewed by over 100 million people around the world. Although Chisso and the Japanese government agreed to pay compensation to the disease victims, as of 1986, only 2,147 applicants out of 14,596 were certified as Minamata disease sufferers. Visual 2 editions published in 2006 in Japanese and held by 9 WorldCat member libraries worldwide. Two decades have passed since Minamata disease was officially recognized, and the children prenatally infected with mercury poisoning have grown up. It not only shows their current condition and the hardships borne by their families, but also the discrimination they had suffered from other Minamata residents, the insufficient response by Chisso, the slowness of government action, and the problems faced by victims who had not been officially designated as suffering from Minamata disease.
