Blackamoor are a genre of figurines, small sculptures or jewellery which depict largely men, but sometimes women, with black skin usually from the 18th century. While they became an art form in the 17th and 18th centuries, particularly in Italy, many believe the figures suggest 'racial conquest'. Talking of her extensive travels through Africa she said: 'I even pretended years ago to be an African, a half-caste African, but because of my light eyes I did not get away with it, but I dyed my hair black.
