Manchild in the Promised Land book by BROWN CLAUDE

Bucky, in the following excerpt, is a fatherless boy whose mother is a drunk and rarely comes home: Since food was the most important thing in the world to Bucky, I was always showing him where some food was and how to get it. Claude Brown, a first generation Harlemite, tells his journey as he navigates the streets of Harlem in the 40s and 50s; how he got started in the streets at the age of six, how he survived, and most importantly how he lived to tell about it.

Most of all, for me, Brown's memoir is filled with regret for the many from his Harlem neighborhood who died, victims of crime, poverty, alcoholism and drug addiction.
